

The Customer Communicator Web Extra

Try these ideas for putting humor to work in the workplace

The good news is it doesn't cost a lot of money or take a lot of time, just look for very simple ways to add a little bit of fun.

Keeping a friendly, light-hearted tone in the workplace is a great way to build teamwork and combat the stress associated with working in customer service. And there are a lot of relatively simple things that you and your coworkers can do to keep things light. Here are suggestions from Mike Kerr, author of You Can't Be Serious! Putting Humor to Work:

■ Create unique, fun awards, such as:

Most Creative Idea, Best Sense of Humor, Most Succinct Memo Writer, Nicest Smile, Friendliest Phone Voice, Most Likely to Be Adopted by a Customer, etc.

■ Have a theme agenda at your next team meeting (e.g., use movie titles to describe your agenda items).

■ Hold a "pick your nose" day where everyone has to don a clown nose, animal nose, or other type as a way to lighten up.

■ To loosen up before a team meeting, brainstorm wacky topics, such as 25 uses for a paper clip.

■ Start team meetings by playing the "Mission Impossible" theme while reading the agenda with a sense of urgency.

■ Give out prizes at team or department meetings (be creative, they don't have to cost too much). Have fun penalties for late arrivals (e.g., a small donation to the social fund).

■ Hold a "match the rep to his or her pet" (past or present) photo contest.

■ Use caution. What you think is funny may not be to a coworker. "It's important to practice safe humor in the workplace," says Kerr. What is safe humor? Consider the topic and make sure it's not sexist, racist, political, or religious.

■ Rename your meeting room or boardroom something fun and inspiring. (Who wants to spend hours in a "bored" room?)

